BRAVE GIRLS .- Two little children, Alice and Mary Welsh, aged respectively nine and twelve years, arrived at Hannibal, Missouri, a day or two ago, having accomplished the whole journey from Ireland, without any other pro-tection than their helplessness and their own brave hearts. Their father had preceded them by a year or more, and having acquired a home-here, wrote to the old country for his family. On the eve of their departure the mother fell sick and died, and the little girls, nothing disheartened, set out alone on their long and per lous journey half round the world. Biography of a Terrible Scoundrel-The Tiger of Atica.

A letter from Nexico to the New Orleans Crescent says:

Manuel Lozada was born in the town of Tepic, and early gave evidence of the de-pravity which has since made him a terror. His first act of barbarity, after being expelled from his native town for his manifold villainies, was to organize a party of bandits, and at the head of them he one day captured the Governor of the town. Conveying him to an out-of-the-way house, he ordered him to be thrown down and bound securely. Then taking a knife, he scarified the Governor's feet until the soles were penetrated in a dozen places to the bone. In this condition be was forced to dance before Lozada, and when he flagged, his tormentor would urge him on by pricking him with a sharp sword. Then he hung him up by the feet until he was dead, after which the body was hewn to pieces and thrown to the dogs. Riding away from the scene of his cruelty, he called at the house of a widow woman, and, because she shut the door when he brandished his bloody sword, he burst into the house and run her through the body. His next act of ferocity was committed at the farm called "Magaras," when he burned down the houses, killed eleven persons, and violated three girls, one of them the daughter of the overseer. This last named person was called out and made to deliver all the valuables about the place, which he was told to carry to the edge of the wood. This done Lozada actually had the poor fellow seized, and then scarified his feet so that he could not walk. The ranch belonged to the brother of Don Carlos Rivas, who is now Lozada's military chief. His band, augmented to eighty men, attacked the village of Santiago, which contained three thousand inhabitants; when he surprised the town the peo-ple fled, with the exception of a few men who made a stand in a strongly built house and who at last succeeded in driving all the robbers out. The whole district of Tepic became alarmed, and the terror was not decreased when a few days after he attacked the village of Ross Morada, on the borders of the State of Jalisco, when he burned all the houses, and did not cease to destroy the people until all had fled to the mountains. Gen. Blanco was at that time Governor of Sinales, but he made no movement to arrest the bandits. San Blas was twice visited by the robber, and the in-habitants only saved themselves by flight to the shipping in the harbor. Atlast the public appeal for safety reached Guadalejara, and a column of three hundred men was sent to put an end to the confusion and robbery. Colonel Lleras, its commander, attacked the mountain stronghold of Lozada, and counted himself victorious because he took eleven o the robber-prisoners. Lozada fled, but immediately after ne recruited his force up to one hundred and fifty men, and threatened Tepic with its twelve thousand souls. The alarm spread in every direction. All classes took up arms, and a force of two thous and men took the field. They had no flag, for at that time the Republic was struggling between the Church and the Liberals, and Comonfort had just run away. Jalisco pronounced in favor of Juarez; and Tepic, in its extremity of danger from the thieves, unfurled the Liberal banner Lozada, almost caught in the toils, retreated, joined the Conservatives, hung out the flag of the Church, and thus be-came a soldier of the nation. He is known as 'The Tiger of Alics," and his reputation has not improved since he naturalized himself. He is now a chief of police in the capital, under the command of General Lagarde.

Are There No Offices for Mechanics! During the last session of Congress, a very ensible speech was made by Mr. Avery, a member from Tennessee. The question before the House was to provide for the extension of the Postoffice at Washington, and an effort wamade to appoint army officers to superintend the erection of the extension.

"I wish, sir," said Mr. Avery, "to put upon record my protest against what seems to be a growing policy of appointing army officers to superintend the erection and construction of the public buildings of the country. While I entertain as high a regard for the army, and the officers of the army, as any gentleman upon this floor, I must say that I am opposed to their being appointed to these positions over the practical mechanic, the architect who has pent his whole life in the study, not only of the theory, but the practice of his profession. Officers educated at West Point are schooled in the arts of war, in the construction of fortifica ions, in the erection of forts; but what, I ask. to they know, or can they know about the contruction and erection of court houses, custom proces, postoffices, or any other building of his character, without practical experience This policy, in my judgment, works a great nardship upon the rights of the great mechani-cal class of this country. They are superseded. They are shut out from having any part in these highly important and responsible positions. They are thus cut off from the opportunity of distinguishing themselves in these great natural fields of their peculiar profession. Sir, there are mechanics, civil engineers, and architects in my district, in my city, far more competent to fill these important offices of pub ic trust-to superintend, direct, and control the erection of public buildings, be they great or small-than any army officer can possibly I am for opening this great theater for the development of talent, skill and genius. wide to the free competition and advancement if the working, practical mechanics over this nation. There is another idea connected with this subject. The profession of the army, and the study of the arts of war, naturally incul cates a notion to order, to command imperatively, which to the undisciplined civilian smacks of tyranny, which the honest, indus trious, intelligent mechanic, with his inborn American notions of equality and independence, cannot brook. I am for the army in its place. I am proud of the American army, its officers and its men. It has shed immortal lustre or the American name. But give unto the army things that are the army's, and unto the civilian the things that are the civilian's
